Native American

Jamie Sans

found in all parts of creation.

who are confused, having forgotten that uniqueness and beauty are
They base their unorning judgments upon the authority of other people
It is only human beings who fear that they are less than perfect.

are fed by the Heart of Grandfather Sun.
The Thunder-beings send the-giving rains to water their growth, and all
The Earth Mother nurtures every plant, for they are all her children.
and form without comparing the beauty of one over the other.
They teach their human counterparts to love the differences in shape

Without fear of shame, the flowers turn their tiny faces to catch the love beautiful.
The flowers teach us that every color and shape is individual and one of love without comparison.

The lesson that the flowers show their human sisters and brothers is:
Every human being is unique as well as beautiful;
Every kind of flower carries a different shape and a different color.

Lessons Of The Flowering Plants

November 12 & 13, 2008
New Britain, Connecticut
Cultural Awareness and Competency Program
Central Connecticut State University