Central Connecticut State University is a regional, comprehensive public university dedicated to learning in the liberal arts and sciences and to education for the professions. CCSU offers undergraduate and graduate programs in five schools — Carol A. Ammon College of Liberal Arts & Social Sciences; Business; Education & Professional Studies; Engineering, Science & Technology; and Graduate Studies. The University is a responsive and creative intellectual and economic resource for the people and institutions of the Capitol Region. Each year, the University creates an estimated economic impact of over $600 million. More than 85 percent of our graduates remain in Connecticut, contributing to the intellectual, cultural, and economic health of the state.
