DODGING PROHIBITION.

While we are not able to state all of Mr. Harry N. Andrews’s views regarding prohibition and alternative methods of liquor control, we think he has done a public service of importance in emphasizing the circumstances of his story. He is a man who has lived through the prohibition experiment during the growth of organized crime and official corruption, and has preserved his principles in spite of temptations. We do not think his views were influenced by any desire for personal recognition.

It is not the first or only article to criticize the enforcement of the Twenty-first Amendment with vigor and acumen. This was stimu-ated by the necessity of Mr. Andrews’s efforts to demonstrate the futility of prohibition in practice. This article was contributed by a man who has long been associated with the prohibition movement.

The main argument advanced is that prohibition has failed to control illegal liquor traffic.

We believe that the arguments presented are sound and convincing. The writer is not only a leading prohibitionist, but a man of great personal integrity and integrity.

The article is well worth reading, and we commend it to the attention of all who are interested in the subject of prohibition.
